FORTUNATE OF EARTH

ARE THOSE WITH WHOM CHILDREN ARE CONFIDENTIAL.

Probably the Most Precious Gift That the Fairies Bestow and It Is Not Given to the Majority of Mankind.

It is very likely a fairy gift, and if you haven't it there is little hope of your ever getting it. If you have it, however, you are the most fortunate sort of all sorts of fortunate folks. You are the sort that the children talk to in the street. And the reason that they tell him things that nobody else ever hears, and very good things to hear, at that. From that fact it is easy to understand that this talk of theirs is no more "good morning" or "hello" sort of conversation. It is real talk about real things, although, to be sure, it is only the fortunate person who hears it that can really understand it.

They begin very abruptly, these children, and the beginning may be in the middle or at either end of a thing. It does not matter. The talk may start something like this, entirely unexpected or unsolicited on the fortunate person's part: "You'd think they'd fall out anyway, if you did think anybody grew on the moon, wouldn't you?" And it may lead anywhere.

Sometimes it is much more personal than that. You may meet a small boy armed with a toy gun and a sword and he may begin, "You'd have to run for it," meaning the street car, "but if you ain't got any better luck than me you'll miss it anyway. I bet I got the worst luck of anybody, and I bet I've found the most horse shoes. If I had good luck I'd been a girl and then I wouldn't have to fight all the time." And this is probably from the terror of his neighborhood, a boy who is supposed by teachers and neighbors and parents, to exist solely for the joy of battle.

If you are the fortunate sort of person, you will be stopped and consulted about everything the children are doing. It may be cold and almost dark, and you may be hurrying home to supper, but if you are the right one, the little girl who is contemplating the show woman, a plump stylish creature with full skirts and a hat with a feather, will call to you without a doubt, of your sympathy, to know whether or not you don't think "she is just a little cross-eyed."

It's the newshoy's fault," she explains, "he poked her in the eye and it ain't been right since. I could take a couple of buttons off her waist, they're only walnuts, and make her some other eyes just to match, but she is getting so sloppy."

They may run after you to tell you a bit of gossip about their "friends," imaginary friends that nobody else ever heard of. They may trot along with you repeating the most astonishing conversations that they have had with squirrels or bears or stars or policemen. And it is all true. It is all because they believe it, and it is the expression of their queer little selves.

Justice, Then Prosperity.

The difference between the men in office now in city, in state and in federal government, and those men in office 30 years ago, in those rather narrow but controlling areas of our politics where there are actually marked differences, lies not in matters of honesty, not in matters of capacity, not in matters of party faith. The real difference is found in their philosophy of life. William Allen White writes in the New York Independent. The political leaders of majorities in the eighties and nineties of the last century believed in business for itself, that prosperity was an end of itself. Today our governments, city, state and national, are more or less under the control of men who all profess, and who in the main believe that justice is more important than prosperity. And the politicians are only taking their cure from the people. A sense of justice—with here a backset, and there a reaction—is growing steadily and overwhelmingly in the American heart.
